Try this...

1. Cut the wheel out or trace it. Cut the spinner out and attach it loosely to the wheel with a paper fastener.
2. Spin the arrow. Name an animal that mainly lives in the area where the arrow lands. Now imagine you could crawl inside this animal and see what it sees. Write about this animal's habitat. You could write about a day or an event in this animal's life. Read to a friend what you wrote down.
3. With two to four partners, take turns spinning the wheel. From where the arrow lands, name something that belongs in earth, sky or water. Each player may ask you one question about the thing you name. Give yourself one point for naming something and one point for each player's question that you answer to their satisfaction.

You can do it!

4. Players take turns spinning the arrow. Where the arrow lands, name a tribe belonging to this region. Give yourself one point for each correct answer. If you think this is easy, try naming the tribe and spelling the tribe's name correctly. See the map page for correct spelling of tribe's names.
